Fund Evolution vs Benchmark (since inception)

Market Commentary

In October, the Fund outperformed its benchmark by 4.0% with a loss of -3.1% versus -7.1%. Over the month, the fund outperformed the MSCI AC Asia Pacific ex-Japan by +1.8% and the MSCI Emerging Markets by +1.3% due to the strong performance of China, while underperforming the MSCI All Country World Index by -0.8%. Notably, the fund also outperformed Indian mid-cap and small-cap stocks which returned -6.8% and -3.7% respectively.

The BSE 200 index's performance in October 2024 was characterized by volatility and a general downward trend towards the end of the month. While there were moments of recovery and positive sentiment in the broader market, individual stock performances varied widely, reflecting ongoing economic uncertainties and sector-specific challenges.

October 2024 has seen the Indian Rupee struggle against the US Dollar. The rupee's decline can be attributed to several factors, including:

Foreign Capital Outflows: There has been a noticeable outflow of foreign capital from Indian markets, driven by concerns over India's economic growth sustainability and rising interest rates in the US.

Global Economic Conditions: Geopolitical tensions and a global equity sell-off have further pressured the rupee, contributing to its record low levels earlier in August.
